- 1 Synthetic Risk Reward Indicator (SRRI) is a key feature of the Key Investor Information Document (KIID), which is a measure of the overall risk and reward profile of a fund. Funds are categorised on a scale from 1 to 7, with 1 being lowest risk and 7 being highest risk. Typically, the SRRI is derived from the volatility of past returns over a 5-year period. The SRRI for each BlackRock Management Index Portfolio may vary, however, each fund aims to maintain its volatility within the targeted risk band.
 2. The Fund's base currency is Euro. Shares for this class are bought and sold in US Dollar. The performance of your shares may be affected by this currency difference. Your shares will be "hedged" with the aim of reducing the effect of exchange rate fluctuations between US Dollar and the base currency of the Fund (i.e. Euro). The hedging strategy may not completely eliminate currency risk and, therefore, may affect the performance of your shares.
 3. The Fund's base currency is Euro. Shares for this class are bought and sold in Sterling. The performance of your shares may be affected by this currency difference. Your shares will be "hedged" with the aim of reducing the effect of exchange rate fluctuations between Sterling and the base currency of the Fund (i.e. Euro). The hedging strategy may not completely eliminate currency risk and, therefore, may affect the performance of your shares.
- The above information is accurate as at January 2019.

How will your initial transfer and future top-ups be invested

A minimum initial funding applies and is set at 10,000 EUR / USD / GBP.

The cash balance in your account will be automatically invested in the chosen fund on or around the fifth Bank Working Day of each month as soon as the minimum purchase level is reached. Minimum Purchase Levels: 500 EUR / USD / GBP.

By default, all cash will be converted into the currency of your chosen instrument once per month, prior to the investment date for the month.

Before opening the account and investing in your chosen fund, please confirm that (please tick the boxes below):

- I acknowledge that the purpose of the account is regular investments in mutual funds and that it is suitable for medium to long-term investing;
- I certify that I am confident investing in mutual funds, or that I have at least little investment experience or no experience but take advice from a qualified third party;
- I understand that I have not and will not receive advice from Internaxx as to the suitability of these investments;
- I have had sufficient time to read and understand the relevant Key Investor Information Document (KIID) available on <https://www.internaxx.com/smart-portfolios> under FAQs - What is a KIID?
- I authorize Internaxx Bank to make investments from my cash account into the fund I have selected; and
- I understand the risks involved in investing in mutual funds, including the risk of loss of all capital invested, corresponding to a medium risk strategy.

6 General Risk warning notice

As a general rule, the Client should not transact, unless he/she understands the nature of the transaction he/she is entering into and the exposure to risk. The Client should therefore carefully consider whether that kind of trading is appropriate for him/her in the light of his/her experience, objectives, financial resources and other relevant circumstances.

Internaxx Bank S.A. assumes that the Client is familiar with the risks inherent in purchasing, selling and holding securities. The term "risk" is used to refer, in particular, to credit risks, market risks and liquidity risks associated with shares, bonds and investment funds as well as foreign exchange rate risks.

Without being exhaustive, these risks can be described as follows:

The risk of changes in net asset values or prices: the risk of changes in net asset values or prices exists in all financial markets. The price of a financial instrument is the result of the balance between supply and demand on the market. The price might be subject to unforeseen fluctuations involving risk of loss. Furthermore, the volatility historically displayed by a particular instrument may change over time, even without extreme conditions intervening.

The economic risk: changes linked to economic cycles always have an impact on securities prices. Prices fluctuate in line with expectations of recession or economic growth. The length and scope of economic cycles vary over time, as does the repercussion on the different sectors of the economy. Moreover, economic cycles can vary from one country to another. Failure to take this into account or a wrong estimation of future economic trends when making an investment decision can result in losses. The Client must take into account the impact of economic conditions on interest rate trends and foreign exchange rates as well as on company earnings in the respective country.

The inflation risk: inflation is measured by the rise in consumer prices. It corresponds to the loss of purchasing power over time. The Client loses purchasing power whenever inflation (of the Client's national economy) exceeds the return on investment (coupons, dividends and capital gains). Clients should therefore base their decisions on the effective interest rate, i.e. the difference between the interest rate and inflation.

The interest rate risk: movements in interest rates expose the fixed interest rate Client to the risk of loss of capital. Even if the issuer scrupulously respects the issue terms, just a rise in market interest rates can lead the Client to suffer a loss or absence of gain. As a general rule, increases in interest rates tend to lower the price of those financial instruments that are sensitive to rates to a greater or lesser extent, such as fixed interest bonds and certain structured products, while a reduction in rates has the opposite effect.

The country risk and transfer risk: a country may default and/or suspend foreign exchange of its currency. This risk includes both economic and political instability. In the event of a foreign currency crunch or restrictions on foreign transfers, the Client may not receive the payments to which he/she is entitled. The Client could also receive payments in a foreign currency that is no longer exchangeable due to foreign exchange restrictions. In principle there is no protection against such a risk, as can be seen from the most recent examples of Argentina in 2002 and Iceland in 2009 although ratings published in the financial press may be of use to investors in this respect. The political and economic climate in certain countries can also produce instability that can lead to the freezing of assets or restriction of rights. In principle, there is no way to protect against such risks, although ratings published in the financial press may be of use to investors in this respect.

Investing in emerging markets may present an accrued risk compared to investments in well-established markets. Emerging markets are securities markets in countries characterized by, among other things, a certain degree of political instability and relatively unpredictable financial markets. Investments in emerging markets should be carried out exclusively by those persons who have a good knowledge of the markets in question and are thus in position to assess the various risk factors, such as political, economic and credit risks, exchange rate risks, market risks, liquidity and settlement risks, regulatory and legal risks.

The currency/exchange risk: foreign exchange risk is the same for all financial instruments, whether they are money market instruments, bonds, equities or derivative products. The Client who purchases a financial instrument of a currency other than his/her reference currency is exposed to foreign exchange risk, i.e. the risk that the foreign currency will depreciate versus the Client's reference currency. The purchase of a US or Asian stock on a European stock exchange does not avoid the foreign exchange risk. The price variations in Euro take into account the variation in the share price on the stock's main market as well as exchange rate fluctuations. Clients can use currency futures and put options to hedge against foreign exchange risk. The key factors influencing exchange rates are inflation and interest rate differences between one country and another, economic forecasts for the country in question, the political situation and the safety of the investment. In addition, psychological factors, such as lack of confidence in the government, can trigger speculation on a currency.

The market liquidity risk: insufficient market liquidity may prevent the Client from selling financial instruments at market prices. A distinction has to be made between a lack of liquidity caused by the laws of market supply and demand and lack of liquidity due to financial instruments' characteristics or to market practice. A lack of liquidity due to market supply and demand arises when a financial instrument is almost exclusively in supply (seller's price or bid) or almost exclusively in demand (buyer's price or offer) at a certain price. Under such circumstances, buy or sell orders cannot be carried out immediately and or only partially (partial execution) and/or at unfavourable conditions. In addition, higher transaction costs may apply.

The credit risk: purchases of securities financed through loans are associated with additional risks.

Supplementary collateral may be required if the prices of the pledged assets move such that the credit limit guaranteed by the pledge is exceeded. If the Client is unable to provide the additional collateral, the bank may be forced to sell the deposited securities at an unfavourable moment. Furthermore, the loss incurred due to an unfavourable movement in the price of a financial instrument may exceed the initial investment amount. Fluctuations in the prices of pledged securities may hinder the Client's ability to repay the loans. Clients need to be aware that, due to the leverage factor accompanying the purchase of credit-financed securities, the sensitivity to price fluctuations of such investments will be proportionally greater. As a consequence, chances for gain increase, as do risks of loss. The extent of those risks will depend on the amount of leverage associated with the investment: the greater the leverage, the greater the risks.

The counterparty risk/ risk related to the solvency of the issuer: default by the counterparty or the issuer of financial instruments for a financial transaction (or of the settlement/clearing system on which the instruments are traded) can lead to the investor losing all or part of the funds invested. The investor must therefore take into consideration the quality of the issuer of the product in which he invests. The concept of rating (or credit scoring) should in this case very much be borne in mind in evaluating this risk, which is liable to change throughout duration to maturity, in particular for products with a long maturity.

The sentiment risk: irrational factors, either market factors or factors specific to a particular security, taken individually, can affect overall movements in prices, for example trends, announcements, opinions or rumours that may lead to unforeseen but sudden and large reductions in price, even though the financial situation and prospects of the businesses that underlie the investment involved may not have changed unfavourably.

The information risk: means that the risk of making unfortunate investment choices through lack of information, or through incomplete or inaccurate information. This may arise from the Client depending on unreliable sources, having a poor understanding of available information, or perhaps from failures in communication.

The transmission risk: when placing an order, the Client must provide certain details needed for its execution to the Bank, such as the type of instrument, the type of order, the volume, the date of execution, etc. The more accurately the order is given, the less the risk of any transmission error.

7 Joint account agreement (if applicable)

The account holders acknowledge hereby that any accounts opened or to be opened subsequently with Internaxx Bank S.A. are governed by the General Terms and Conditions of the Bank, by the conditions stated on the Application Form and by the following special provisions.

Special provisions

It is expressly agreed and understood that each holder of a joint account or joint custody account may dispose severally of the assets in account and of the securities held in custody account. For obligations arising from a joint account, the holders shall be liable for the full amount as joint and several debtors. The assets in account and securities held in custody account as well as arrears, interest and dividends may be withdrawn and, in general, all transactions on the above mentioned accounts may be done by one of the account holders without intervention of the other(s). The Bank will be free from any commitment towards the account holders if such a payment or delivery of securities is done to one of the account holders against this holder's sole instruction.

The interests, dividends, arrears, distributions as well as any funds paid in by the account holders are credited to the account with the Bank.

Each of the account holders, against his/her sole instruction and without intervention of the other(s), may give power to a third party to exercise for and on behalf of him, wholly or in part, the rights accruing to him from this agreement.

Where accounts are in the name of more than one person each account holder will be jointly and separately liable to the Bank under the Terms and Conditions. This means that each account holder is separately responsible for keeping to its terms. If any of the account holders do not keep to them, the Bank can take action against any of the account holders, singularly or together. The bank will normally act on instructions from any of the account holders. If account holders give the Bank conflicting instructions, the Bank will not have to act on them. Where instructions can be given to the Bank by any of the account holders, an account holder will be bound by the instruction given by another joint account holder.

If the Bank become aware of divorce proceedings between joint account holders or there is a disagreement between account holders to the running of the account, the Bank may, but is not obliged to, freeze the account or resort to joint authorisation for each instruction on the account.

If either of the account holders gives notice to end the Terms, the Bank will close the account in accordance with the instructions received. If the Bank gives notice to end the Terms, it will transfer client's investments into joint names, unless otherwise instructed.

The decease of one or more of the account holders will produce no change in the rights and commitments mentioned above. The assets in an account may be paid and the securities in custody be handed over against discharge of one of the surviving account holders or the legal successor of the deceased account holder(s). The Bank may nevertheless require to be provided with specific documentation prior to remittance of the assets to the surviving account holder or to the legal successor of the deceased account holder.
